

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

A deep area of low pressure will move northeast between Shetland and the Faeroe Islands this morning. Westerly gales and locally severe gales will continue on the southern flank of the low, bringing gusts of 60 to 70 mph. Gusts of 80 mph are likely at first this morning over the far north of mainland Scotland and Orkney - see Amber warning area. Expect some restrictions on exposed bridges and potential disruption to travel.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 01:45 on Wed, 30th Jan 2013 until 21:00 on Wed, 30th Jan 2013

Remaining windy across the north of Scotland through today, with gales or severe gales persisting across the far north until evening. Note that this is an update to the warning issued yesterday.

The public should be aware of the need to take extra care and of the potential for disruption, particularly to travel.
